

Black Walnut

Juglans nigra

Walnut trees are always valued for flavorful nuts and choice wood. The black walnut, native to central and eastern North America, is the best known of 17 New World walnut species.

This individual combines impressive size, respectable age, and handsome appearance. Its tremendous width of branching stands out prominently. Hence it not only lends cooling shade, but its noble presence makes it a local landmark.

On October 15, 1998 it became Seattle's fourth heritage tree and the first one located on a private residential property.

2003

Owner: Vivian McLean

Address: 3814 – 20th Ave SW (backyard)

Location: Pigeon Point, West Seattle

Size: 107.5 inch circumference, 80 feet tall

Category: Specimen / Historic AAA

Heritage Tree 98.1